MARGINAL COLUMN By ALASTAIR BUCHAN

THE British Government's future policy towards Cyprus is still shrouded in secrecy and obscurity. The Governor, Sir John Harding, has returned to London after three weeks in Cyprus in almost constant consultation with the Cabinet. The Government is now working against time to draft a new solution which can be made public soon for a few days' time. Mr. Duffell, who arrived in Athens, unless Britain has, by then, produced proposals which at least mollify, even if they do not satisfy, Greek and Cypriot opinion, he will be presented with an opportunity for making trouble between Greece, Britain and Turkey which he will be obliged to refuse.

THE secrecy with which the British Government is proceeding is obviously necessitated by the intricate diplomatic manoeuvres necessary in Athens, Ankara and Washington (for American good offices have been solicited) to bring about a settlement. The only two points that appear to have been firmly decided are:

- 1) That Britain will now offer Cyprus a "liberal" measure of self-government. This can only mean a popular elected Assembly with Greek majority. The rights of the Turkish minority will be protected by some other form of constitutional guarantee.
- 2) That a definite date will be set for self-determination, in place of the previous British policy of "sometime."

WHETHER the date will be 10 or 15 years is not yet known. It will certainly not be a period of two or three years, which the Greek Government has suggested. Just what powers the British Government will reserve to itself during the period between the grant of self-government and that of self-determination is not clear, and has not yet been decided. The obvious question is whether this formula is liberal enough to satisfy the Government and to all Greek support for the EOKA terrorists in Cyprus, and on the other hand, whether it will be accepted by the Turkish Government as a betrayal of the Turkish Cypriot minority, and of Turkey's strategic interests.

MR. Francis Noel-Baker, a Labour Member of Parliament, who is an expert on the area, and who acted as an intermediary between Archbishop Makarios and the Cypriot Government before the breakdown of relations between them, suggested last Sunday, in an interview with the "London Observer," a four-point plan for Cyprus. These were: (a) that the British Government should produce the final draft of a liberal constitution for self-government; (b) that the date on which the Cypriots should be allowed to exercise self-determination should be announced; (c) that in the intervening period between self-determination and self-government any intrigues on the part of the rights of the Turkish minority by the Greek majority should be null and void; (d) that the British military installations in Cyprus should be concentrated in an enclave which would remain British territory indefinitely whatever the results of self-determination.

THIS last point represents an original contribution to the problem, and is one that has many attractions. For one thing it would enable self-determination to be exercised much earlier than 10 to 15 years, for those periods are predicated upon the length of time given for the protection of Britain's oil interests in the Middle East which will be the paramount consideration in Britain's policy towards Cyprus and the whole Eastern Mediterranean. To create a permanent British enclave on the island around Famagusta, where the important air bases are now sited, would make it possible to direct the strategic front of the island problem. It would presumably also satisfy Turkey by providing that the military installations in Cyprus would not pass into Greek hands. But, so far, there are no signs as yet that the British Government is responsive to this proposal.

Ceylon to Obtain Republican Status

LONDON, Saturday (Reuters). — Ceylon's new Premier, Mr. Solomon Bandaranaike, will tell the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' conference here next week his country intends to become a republic. He will ask that Ceylon be given the status of a republic in the Commonwealth if this is her people's desire.

Ceylon's request is assured of sympathetic and unanimous acceptance because of the precedents established since world war two in the cases of India and Pakistan. India and Pakistan were given independence by Britain in 1947. India had been a dominion since 1931, and in 1948 the Commonwealth decided to accept Pakistan status, she elected to remain in the Commonwealth on the same basis as India.

The new Commonwealth countries to be represented at the London conference are Australia, New Zealand, Canada, South Africa, India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Rhodesia, Nyasaland, Federation and Malaya. Their combined population of over 600 million is about a quarter of all the world's inhabitants, and the Asian nations in the Commonwealth represent about 40 per cent of the world's population.

LAW REPORT
The Jerusalem Post
June 24, 1956

In the Supreme Court
Sitting as Court of Civil Appeals
Yitzhak Pines, Appellant, v. The Pension Officer, Ministry of Defence, Respondent (C.A. 156/56).

Invalidated Soldier's Appeal Fails on Technical Grounds
The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal against a decision of the Tel Aviv Pension Appeals Committee delivered on December 22, 1955 (J.A. 1297/55).

The appellant was injured in a motor-accident while doing a week's service in the Reserve as a result of his injury in 1955, after he had been discharged from the army. He was subsequently employed as a result of his accident. He then applied to the Pension Officer for a pension. His application was rejected on the grounds of technicalities. The Pension Officer stated that the appellant was not entitled to a pension because he was not a "discharged soldier" within the meaning of the law, and that the definition of "discharged soldier" contained in the law was not applicable to the appellant's case.

The appellant argued that he was a "discharged soldier" within the meaning of the law, and that he was entitled to a pension. He argued that the definition of "discharged soldier" in the law was not applicable to his case, and that he was entitled to a pension because he was a "discharged soldier" within the meaning of the law.

The court held that the appellant was not a "discharged soldier" within the meaning of the law, and that he was not entitled to a pension. The court stated that the definition of "discharged soldier" in the law was not applicable to the appellant's case, and that he was not entitled to a pension because he was not a "discharged soldier" within the meaning of the law.

Judgment
Justice Wilton, in delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court, said, at the outset, that the appellant's appeal was dismissed. He stated that the appellant's appeal was dismissed because he was not a "discharged soldier" within the meaning of the law, and that he was not entitled to a pension. He stated that the definition of "discharged soldier" in the law was not applicable to the appellant's case, and that he was not entitled to a pension because he was not a "discharged soldier" within the meaning of the law.
